A Note from The Principal

Parents, I have made a bold stand at home. Last week I told my 8th grade daughter no more SnapChat. Bracing for the blowback, I was surprised by how short the disappointment was and encouraged that it only took about a half an hour of scowls. The decision to eliminate SnapChat came out of the blue to her as she gets good grades, she does her chores, is kind, drama free, and has done nothing wrong in the use of the application (that I know of). I made my decision to eliminate SnapChat based on my experience as an educator. I have seen more than I can stand of young lives being absolutely destroyed by social media platforms. Cyberbullying, fights, rumors, heartbreak, anger, embarrassment (usually from inappropriate photos), depression, and thoughts of suicide are all magnified to the extreme by these platforms. Our staff, including me, has spent countless, and I mean countless, hours investigating cyberbullying, disciplining students who are involved in cyberbullying, patching kids back together, doing conflict resolutions, and refereeing constant conflict, mainly due to social media interactions that happen outside of school. Unfortunately, some of our students think that drama is the norm and this is only magnified by social media. Our students need to know that life is not all drama or meant to be lived from crisis to crisis.

Obviously, SnapChat is not entirely to blame for the world's problems. However, social media platforms such as SnapChat, that allow messages to come and go without a trace, is simply dangerous. We are constantly battling a few other social media platforms such as Facebook, Instagram and Musical.ly.

As a parent, I know how easy it is to be lulled into trusting our kids; especially when they have good attendance, good grades, and show good citizenship. However, it only takes a split second for our kids' lives to be devastated by perhaps a mean post, an adult stranger trying to connect with them, or an inappropriate picture that is sent or received. I know I have really stepped up my "parenting game" to be vigilant in protecting my children from the cyber world, and yet still realizing we live in a technology based society.

Join me in rechecking our thinking in the value of social media and finding that balance. Talk with your children about the negative impact of social media, do random phone checks, minimize social media sites, have them charge and store their phones in another room while they sleep, limit the amount of phone use at home, have a rule of no phones at the dinner table, if your kids have social media require that they allow you to join in their network by following or liking their sites. Put your foot down on any posts that are negative towards others and demand that they respect the home and learning environment. My daughter is 14 and my son is 11, they have their entire lives in front of them; I refuse to let social media ruin it for them.
